MINERS DEFY DEMAND OF ROOSEVELT

Workers Walk Out In All But Two Of Important Captive Mines

WASHINGTON, (UP)—All but two of the captive coal mines which supply the nation's steel mills with coal were closed today by a strike of the United Mine Workers who walked out in defiance of President Roosevelt's demand that the coal must be mined without interruption.

Reports from the captive mine zones—in Pennsylvania, Alabama, West Virginia, Illinois and Kentucky—showed but two mines in operation and all but about 800 of the 53,000 miners—95 per cent of whom are members of the CIO mine union—were idle.

The actual work stoppage became effective only a few hours before the steel and mine union executive go to the White House to report to Mr. Roosevelt on "progress" toward settling the dispute the sole issue of which is whether there shall be a union shop in the traditionally open shop steel industry which controls the mines.

That report will be entirely negative—the negotiations have failed—and the captive mines are idle for the second time within 30 days. Picket lines were formed before some of the mines in Pennsylvania and in Harlan county, Ky. In the Birmingham area and in Westville, Ill., the miners merely stayed away. There were no reports of violence and the only indication of rebellion by the miners to John L. Lewis' order not to open the mines was at the Rosedale mine of the Bethlehem Steel Corp. near Johnstown, Pa. There more than half of the 500 men scheduled to report on the first day shift marched through a picket line to work. This was the mine that refused to heed Lewis' strike call last month.

A Jones & Laughlin Steel Co. mine, already working under a union shop contract, was in operation at Bobtown in Green County, Pa. It employs about 500 men. Other J. & L. mines under union shop agreements were closed, however, the miners engaging in a sympathy walkout.

Local Couple Wed Here

Florence Crosby Becomes Bride Of Young Navy Photographer

Miss Florence Elizabeth Crosby, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy T. Crosby and Vernon Donald Emmerson, son of Mr. and Mrs. V. E. Emmerson, of Placerville were united in marriage at 10 a. m. Saturday morning at the Church of Our Savior by the Ven. Rex A. Barron assisted by the Rev. Edwin J. Castle-dine.

The marriage ceremony was followed by a communion service for the bride couple. Only members of the immediate families and a few close friends were present.

Miss Zella Virginia Emmerson and Jack Emmerson, sister and brother of the groom acted as bride's maid and best man respectively. Miss Nellie Crosby, sister of the bride, accompanied by Mrs. Ruby Wright, rendered a very beautiful solo, "Ave Maria." The bride was given away by her father and Ralph Martin acted as usher.

The bride was dressed in navy blue sheer with dusty rose accessories and a large shoulder corsage. The bridesmaid wore sun yellow with a corsage of yellow flowers.

Immediately following the ceremony a reception was held in the Guild Hall where wedding cake, bride's cake and punch were served. Later in the day the newlyweds drove to Sacramento where they remained until Sunday morning, when the new husband had to leave for San Diego. From there he will sail to his station at Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, where he has been assigned as official naval photographer for a period of one to two years. His wife may join him there later.

Clinton Veerkamp, was a business caller in town Saturday from the Gold Hill section.

Senators Go to the Map Over Neutrality

34 First Aiders Enrolled

New Class Scheduled To Start At Strawberry Resort Nov. 24

Following up the work started here several years ago in the Red Cross first aid instruction, one new class comprising 34 enrollments is now entering its third week, according to E. W. Zueger, who has been acting as instructor. Class meetings are being held on Wednesday nights of each week in the superior court room starting at 7:30.

Another group will meet for the first time at Strawberry Resort Monday night, November 24, and it is planned to hold the sessions there weekly, probably on the same night of each week. This class is, as have been the others, open to all who may be interested, but is designed especially for those who reside in the resort area.

A feature of this year's instruction, Zueger stated, is in connection with national defense and adds a few new points important to the present emergency.

The local enrollment includes: Jean Darrington, Mrs. Margaret Darrington, Harry Darrington, Robert E. Gray, Donald Gray, Mrs. Claude Lewis, Chris C. Orelli, Georgie Orelli, Mrs. Forrest Van Vleck, Mrs. Alex Revaz, Sylvia Austin, Mrs. Pearl Timney, Mrs. Ethel Tidwell, Mrs. Goldie Baker, Mrs. Susanna Toombs, Mrs. Carl Visman, Reta May, Beverly May, Sara Mae Godard, Mrs. H. Co. D Expresses Thanks To El Dorado County

Camp San Luis Obispo, November 15, 1941
An open letter to the people of El Dorado County:

The men of Company D, 115th Engineers (C) have delegated me to write this letter of appreciation for the way in which they were received during the recent stay in Placerville.

Particularly gratifying was the interest and friendship exhibited toward the men from various other sections of the United States who have assigned to our Company through the medium of the Selective Service System. When the orders were received for the Company to go to Placerville, the news was received with little enthusiasm. It would be just another "bivouac problem" for them (or so they thought). How different is the story now. Almost to a man they expressed a desire to return and renew their brief acquaintances and again enjoy the hospitality for which the Sierra-Nevada foothills are so famous.

Please accept our sincere and heartfelt thanks and you may be sure that, regardless of what lies ahead, our stay in Placerville will always be one of the high spots on the log of Company D. Sincerely,
BERNARD B. BALL,
1st Sergeant

EASTERN FRONT FIGHTING IS BITTER

Germans Report Capture Of Kerch And Advance On Sevastopol Base

By JOE ALEX MORRIS
U. P. Foreign News Editor

German armed forces reported gains in bitter fighting on two sectors of the snow-swept eastern front today and Japan laid down the program on which Tokyo proposes to settle the Pacific crisis on threat of resort to force.

The fighting on the eastern front centered around three vital points, including Tula and Volokolamsk on the Moscow sector and Kerch in the Crimea, at the bridgehead toward the Caucasus oil fields.

The Germans reported the capture of Kerch and gains before the Crimean naval base of Sevastopol after many days of bitter fighting. The fall of Kerch, however, would not necessarily eliminate strong Soviet fortified positions six miles eastward at Kerukale, on the narrowest part of the Kerechenski Straits over which the Germans must pass to reach the mainland road to the Caucasus.

The Russians have strong artillery positions on a 500-foot bluff at Yerukale.

The Germans said they took 101,600 prisoners in the Crimea.

On the Moscow front, the main action was at the munitions center of Tula, 100 miles south of the capital, where radio Moscow said that new German attacks had forced a way into the outskirts during a heavy snow storm. Fighting continued in the streets, the radio reported, with the fate of the city still in doubt despite heavy German losses.

Tula is the southern "hinge" of the Moscow defenses where the Axis forces repeatedly have been thrown back in efforts to stab through the Russian lines in a vast encirclement of the Soviet capital.

According to Russian reports, the Germans suffered loss of 100 tanks in fighting at Tula and Volokolamsk west of Moscow, where the Russians recaptured 20 villages and killed some 4,000 Germans in one sector.

The Russians also reported they were fighting strongly at Kalinin, the northern "hinge" on the Moscow defenses, while there appeared to be no important changes on other fronts.

Of special interest in connection with the war in Russia was an announcement by Berlin that Alfred

BANDITS HOLD UP PURITY STORE AT AUBURN; NET $1,190

Three men escaped with $1,190 from the Purity grocery store at Auburn Friday night, after forcing a clerk to open the safe, Police Chief J. M. Hamilton said.

The clerk, Harold Murray, told police he had closed the store and walked to his machine, where his wife was seated. When he reached the car three men held him up and forced him to open the store and hand over the money.

One of the three men had purchased groceries prior to the closing Murray told the chief. He and another man following Murray to the store, the third man guarded Mrs. Murray in the auto.

Red Cross Meeting To Be Postponed

Due to Thursday's being a holiday, the regular meeting of the Red Cross production department will be held Friday at the Episcopal Guild hall instead of Thursday as scheduled. The hour, 10 a. m., to 4:30 p. m., will be the same as usual, according to Mrs. Ethel Wickes, chairman.

In making the announcement of the change, Mrs. Wickes requested that all of those having finished garments to please bring them in not later than the last of November in order to permit shipment on Dec. 1.

NAVY CAPTURES AXIS VESSEL IN ATLANTIC

Prize Crew Bringing Ship To U. S. Port; Seizure Made Nov. 6th

BY LYLE C. WILSON
United Press Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, (UP)—A United States navy prize crew is bringing to an unnamed Atlantic port today a captured Axis merchant vessel caught sailing under United States colors in the equatorial Atlantic.

The navy announced its capture last night. Today President Roosevelt widens the scope of belligerent action at sea by signing the bill scrapping all shipping restrictions of the neutrality act. Vice President Henry A. Wallace affixes his signature at noon and the President was expected to make it law soon thereafter.

Although a United States cruiser—unidentified—seized the Axis masquerader on Nov. 6, the navy made public only the barest details.

Where she was bound and from what port, the nationality of her owners, the fate of her crew and whether she was an armed raider or a blockade runner seeking momentary safety behind the United States flag—these were the questions the navy left unanswered.

The navy department's announcement that the seized vessel was "owned by subjects of one of the Axis powers" indicated that it belonged to Italians or Japanese rather than Germans. The word "subjects" suggests the owner was a national of a state headed by a king or emperor.

(Rear Admiral Yates Stirling, Jr., retired, United Press naval critic, deduced from the navy department statement that the ship was Italian and was captured a little north of the equator between the coasts of Brazil and Africa. He thought the vessel had been towed for 10 days—since it was captured

Plummer Using New Methods

Humane Treatment Of State Prisoners Gains Nation-Wide Attention

BY JOHN W. DUNLAP
United Press Staff Correspondent

SACRAMENTO, (UP)—California's prisons seem to be putting the state on the national map with an emphasis on more humane handling of criminals.

Warden Clyde Plummer of Folsom really was the first to break the ice with his program of the past four years in dealing man to man with convicts, and giving them a few of the finer things of life on the theory that they are human beings and not animals.

It was Plummer who organized an inmate orchestra to play for meals, brightened up the mess hall and kitchens with white paint, invited any and all convicts to come into his private office for a talk, revamped the sports program, put more men on the prison farms, promised radio programs as soon as the system can be installed, received weekly motion pictures, etc.

Of course, the warden also replaced outmoded guns and catwalks with modern rifles, machine guns and gun towers, and every guard has to shoot a minimum score once monthly to hold his job. But a fine spirit of good fellowship pervades the entire prison reservation, in appreciation for the regime that abolished solitary confinement and the iron fisted type of prison administration.

Plummer's four-year term, incidentally, expired Nov. 20, and the prison board meets Nov. 27 to decide on the next term. There has been little talk or indication of a change and Plummer is expected to get another four years.

Then over at San Quentin, Warden Clinton Duffy has worked wonders with new policies, so much so that the Saturday Evening Post had a recent feature article on his work. He is the first warden in memory to walk around the prison yard alone, risking the possibility of a knife in his back, but confident that all the men are his friends. Duffy was born and raised at the (Continued on Page Three)

The Parent-Teacher Association met Friday with the president, Mrs. Sims, in charge. It was agreed that the organization will sponsor motion pictures at the schoolhouse every Wednesday evening, under auspices of the British War Relief Society. Mrs. John Montgomery, chairman for the dance on November 15, reported that all plans are complete. Entertainment for the meeting was by the pupils of Mrs. Denman's class who gave violin, cornet, trumpet and Hawaiian guitar numbers.

Miss Lila Jinkerson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Jinkerson, was married at Reno on Sunday, November 9, to Ernest Davidson, who recently has completed an enlistment in the Navy. The couple were accompanied to Reno by her parents and will make their home here in Camino, Mr. Davidson having been re-employed with the Michigan-California Lumber Company.

In ever increasing numbers naval units are joining Uncle Sam's fleet. Here is the latest, the $6,000,000 submarine, Grouper, launched at the Electric Boat Company's plant at Groton, Conn., the twenty-fourth sent down the ways there since 1933.

Broccoli Italiane

Cook 1 1/2 pounds of broccoli in boiling salted water just short of being done. In a heavy iron frying pan place 6 tablespoons of oil and saute 2 garlic cloves sliced thin until light brown; add broccoli coarsely chopped, season to taste and cook easily 10 minutes. Sprinkle with grated cheese when ready to serve.

No house in Coloma brings back the memory of that promising period following the turbulent days of the Gold Rush as does the Vernon house. It goes back to the time when Coloma was the county seat of El Dorado and when, as a town, it was conspicuous of its unique place in the American heritage. Its note of yellow on the green landscape suggests the thought of gold, but more precious than gold has been the cherishing and the protecting within its walls of the old traditions.

This house was built in 1886 by Joseph Seeley, a jeweler of Coloma for his bride. Its wide verandah and solid columns indicate southern influence. In the '50s a goodly portion of the Coloma population was made up of southerners who had brought with them much of their leisurely, graceful way of life. They even tried to adapt southern architecture to the western mountains. There were verandahs and wide halls running the length of the houses to give coolness and privacy. While the interior of the Vernon house has been modernized, the exterior remains very much as it did in the early days.

The old garden which is a mass of fragrance in summer shares the personality of the house. Mr. Seeley, the present owner tells me, was a rose fancier. His heart-shaped garden with its 58 varieties of roses was a source of delight to all the townspeople. A fig tree, two pears and a walnut that Joseph Seeley planted are still bearing today.

Although the poet Edwin Markham is associated with the neighboring house which is also Vernon property, he lived in this house also during the time he taught at Coloma. Photographs of the poet, his books and one of his bookcases presented by his son, Virgil Markham, to the present owner tend to keep the poet alive in memory.

Another link with early associations was formed when the house came into the possession of the Vernon family in 1914. In the living room, in its lovely, old-fashioned frame, hangs a portrait of Miss Augusta Sargent of Boston, Massachusetts, painted in 1840. Tradition says the portrait was done by a cousin of the same name. In 1843

"COCKTAIL GIRL" by MAY CHRISTIE

CHAPTER VIII
 The honeymoon in Europe was perfectly wonderful. Italy, that enchanted land—how the Latin men admired Virginia's beauty! She would twirl her bridegroom laughing about his jealousy. It thrilled and flattered her—and at the same time, gave her a sense of security.

They went to Florence—Rome—Naples—Sorrento—then motored all along the Mediterranean, through Viareggio and Rapallo and Genoa, to Monte Carlo, where they stayed a day or two. There the Casino fascinated Virginia.

She played baccarat. But Henry encouraged no high stakes, and Virginia was loath to ask him for money.

A stop at Cap d'Antibes, at the famous hotel above the rocks, with its tiny yacht club. Then on to Juan-les-Pins and Cannes.

Virginia had had a fluster one afternoon in the Juan-les-Pins casino, and thereafter, Henry took her to that little outdoor rendezvous, La Potiniere, for shrimps and a pre-dinner cocktail.

"I so enjoyed this afternoon, playing baccarat!" exclaimed Virginia.

Henry answered indulgently: "You certainly were lucky, darling!"

She said quickly: "They say 'lucky at cards, unlucky in love'! But that won't be true of us, dear, will it?"

They drank to each other, and then fell into a tender silence. From a neighboring table came a chatter of French voices—two men and a woman. Suddenly Virginia's face tightened as she overheard something.

One of the strangers in the little restaurant, after a keen look at Henry, was informing his companions in French that there was one of the most sought-after young men in all that amazing New York City! "Those American marriages never last," he added with a trace of scorn in his voice. "The men never stick to one woman! It is a folly for them to marry. From what I saw of him in New York, I pity the young girl. She looks sweet and simple. She will never hold him against such competition."

Virginia whitened. No, Henry hadn't heard! He would not have understood the French tongue, anyway. She rose. "Let's go." She was disturbed to the core, but too proud to repeat a word of it to him.

That night as she lay by the side of the sleeping Henry in their hotel in Cannes, she was restless. She had never thought of women in Henry's life! Naively, she had imagined herself the first girl he had kissed—or loved. She had imagined, lover like, that the state was perfectly clean when he had fallen in love with her. . . . It was a long time before Virginia fell asleep that night.

Mrs. De Peyster Fish, that well-known society leader, was discussing the marriage of Henry Van Tyle over a cup of tea in her palatial penthouse on upper Fifth Avenue. A small group of cronies were there, including Daffodil who was popular for his gossip. With him was Julie Trevor.

Despite Henry's defecation, Julie was beautifully dressed, these days. Mrs. De Peyster Fish wondered if Julie was doing unduly well at the commission racket, which was Julie's forte, next-in-order to vamping the male. Or had she a rich man tucked away in the background? Not that it mattered one way or the other, for Mrs. De Peyster Fish prided herself on being broadminded, like all her set.

"My dear, they arrived this afternoon on the Majestic! They're at Henry's apartment now. My dear, she's a perfect sight. I assure you, no style! No looks! No breeding! Henry introduced me to her himself at the Kentucky Derby," Daffodil eagerly chirped.

Here followed a vivid description of Chatty Wilbertson, whom Daffodil had mistaken for the bride! . . . "I'll call Henry right away, and congratulate him, and ask them here tomorrow night. We'll give a party for them. Then all of us can see her for ourselves!" Mrs. De Peyster Fish hung a look at Julie that was not tinged with malicious pleasure.

The invitation proved so urgent—so determined—that Henry accepted. "We may as well get it, and meet the gang!" he told Virginia.

The hostess was greatly surprised when the Parisian vision of loveliness that was Virginia walked into her house the following night by the side of Henry Van Tyle, and with an air of perfect poise and breeding accepted congratulations on their marriage.

While the women were partaking of their after-dinner coffee in the beautiful conservatory at the far end of the main hall, the doorbell rang, and in tripped the airy Daffodil, followed by Julie, and several friends.

Seeing the ladies, Daffodil slipped gracefully forward, effusively kissed his hostess's hand, and whirled about toward the bride. A blank expression came over his pink-and-white face as he viewed Virginia.

"Oh, no. We have not met. How do you do?" said Virginia frankly, extending her hand in answer to his greeting.

"But, Daffodil, you insisted that you had met Henry's beloved at the Kentucky Derby," protested Mrs. De Peyster Fish. "You told us all about her. You intrigued us immensely!" she insisted, thoroughly enjoying the young man's discomfiture.

Julie, meantime, was giving Daffodil most venomous glances. But as she, in turn, was presented to the bride, her face fell into welcoming smiles. She greeted Virginia with just the right degree of cordiality. Willie Krass's birthday gift of a diamond marquise ring gleamed on the third finger of Julie's left hand, and in addition to the emerald pin which reposed on Julie's bosom she had a couple of gorgeous bracelets.

Polite banalities were exchanged. More people arrived. The double doors of the dining room swung open, and the men came out, shoulder to shoulder.

Before she even saw Henry, Julie knew by the sudden happy light in Virginia's eyes that he was drawing near. . . .

But before Julie could greet him—she had rehearsed the part perfectly—the diamond ring should be flashed before him—those two beautiful girls, Bright Eyes and Precious, had rushed at him and kissed him heartily. Triumphant they led him into the conservatory, one hanging on each arm.

Shaking them off cleverly, he came directly toward his wife, including Julie in the greeting. She extended her hand as though in a spirit of frankest comradeship to the man whom she had once looked upon as her own. In low, clear tones which seemed to carry a ring of real sincerity, she congratulated him on his great good fortune. At the same time, she made a great play with her left hand, hoping he would observe her engagement ring. But he was relieved over this awkward bridge being successfully crossed, and Julie making herself so pleasant to Virginia, and he failed to notice the gem. . . .

While Henry's friends were circling around the bride, Henry dropped into the vacant seat on the other side of Julie. Immediately she seized this opportunity to tell him that it was "too utterly ridiculous" that the papers, just at the time of his marriage, should have erroneously printed the announcement that Henry was her fiancé, instead of her betrothed! Henry then noticed the ring. And with a pang of anger and hurt pride, Julie saw the relieved expression on his face!

"Who's the lucky devil?" Henry asked jocularly of Julie, seeing her gorgeous ring.

But Julie prevaricated. Looking at Virginia she said, ever so sweetly: "Henry, she's perfectly adorable! Why on earth did you keep it from us all? Where have you been hiding her?"

Henry looked sheepish but pleased. Julie continued her "good work." "I should love to take her around! She must be launched correctly. Do let me help you, Henry. You simply must give her a big party!"

Julie's air was so sincere and friendly and so enthusiastic, that Henry was disarmed. No one knew New York's Mayfair like Julie Trevor. Since he expected to be extremely busy in the next few weeks, it was a distinct relief for Henry to know that Virginia would have a real woman friend. He told Julie that they must find a bigger apartment, now that he was married. He had been thinking about giving Virginia a party, to introduce her, but, having so little time, he could not himself arrange anything.

"You're a brick, Julie," he declared. "It's awfully good of you to take it off my hands."

More people kept coming in to Mrs. De Peyster Fish's reception. Virginia and Henry separated. Indeed, Henry was literally dragged away from her by the women who were fussing around him. All old friends of his, it seemed! They flung pokes and nudges, putting into action the time-worn custom of kissing the bridegroom.

Virginia, sharp little knives of jealousy at her heart, went out on the terrace to view New York at night, with a couple of men.

So this was the party! The parties went! Fervently she wished she hadn't come. The myriad sparkling lights of the great city seemed like mocking eyes, winking at her inward disturbance. Silent and distrustful, her companions found her dull, and made an excuse to rejoin the party.

As they re-entered the penthouse, Virginia had a glimpse of Henry in a deep chair, on the arm of which one pretty girl was perched, while another fetched a highball for him. This was too much! In Rome she'd seen the Romans do! The memory of the unknown Frenchman's words in "La Potiniere" at Juan-les-Pins added fuel to her fire.

How dared they be so familiar, these bold creatures! And where—where was the security of her romantic courtship—her blissful marriage?

A catty remark from one of the women did nothing to reassure Virginia. "Better watch that handsome man of yours!" Nor did the manner in which the hostess went out of her way to impress the bride with little episodes of the past in which Henry appeared to be a central figure!

"They want to upset me. They're furious that he married out of his set. They take it as a slight. They detest the sight of me!" thought Virginia.

The only one who seemed really to try to be pleasant and friendly was that gorgeous-looking Julie Trevor. Too made-up—too artificial-looking. But apparently she had a kind heart. Julie had come up to her, put an arm about her waist, and murmured: "You mustn't mind the way the girls go on. They're always like this to every newly-married couple. They're doing it only to see how you'll take it. They're really good scoundrels."

Virginia answered stiffly that she saw nothing amiss.

Julie continued cordially: "I was just telling Henry that I hope you and I are going to be good friends, and see a great deal of each other. He's such a dear! He's already delegated me to help launch your first party! It's so very important that you meet the right people from the start."

From then on, it seemed as though all the women in the place were making playful sorties at Henry. And to his wife it seemed as though her good-looking husband was not particularly averse to these attentions!

Her pride was up in arms. The radio had been turned on, and as most of the men had been claimed by the girls for dancing, Virginia joined a handsome man in the bar, who, unfortunately, was rather badly liquored. She did not realize this, at first.

on Nov. 6—and might now be in a United States naval base in the Caribbean. He based his belief that the vessel was Italian on the navy's use of the word "subject" and the theory that a German skipper would have succeeded in scuttling his ship.)

Suspicious despite the American flag astern and its painted likeness on the sides and deck of the vessel, officers of the patrolling cruiser ordered her to heave to. While a boarding party was moving over in a small boat to examine her papers, she hoisted distress signals, her crew piled into lifeboats and two explosions sounded within her hull. The Americans prevented the ship sinking. Badly damaged, she is coming to port now to be turned over to a United States marshal and charged with sailing under false colors. Her crew, presumably was picked up and will be charged with whatever seems appropriate under maritime law.

prison, the son of a guard, and understands prison characters as well as any man in the state.

He, too, gives the men a break and treats them as humans. The radio system has been installed at San Quentin and as soon as the kinks are ironed out, a duplicate network will be finished at Folsom.

The prisoners no longer stand for hours on small painted spots, and the food is better.

The gradual completion of the new southern California prison for first offenders in Chino rounds out the penal picture for men, giving an opportunity for the state to segregate its hardened offenders from the first timers. Each man now goes to San Quentin for classification by psychologists who keep the men apart from other prisoners until they are sure whether they should be confined in Chino, San Quentin or Folsom.

The women's prison at Tehachapi offers most women criminals a new outlook on life, situated as it is from populated areas and constituting a city within itself. The women are taught crafts and household proficiency, oftentimes their first experience in such activities. Escape would not be difficult yet it is seldom attempted.

Particular emphasis is laid in all four prisons on education, extension courses, encouraging the men and women to write or paint or play musical instruments, or whatever bent they possess.

There are critics who say this is molly-coddling the prisoners. Yet it is not disputed that many of these men and women made only one slip up, or were victims of circumstances. To give them no future except long association with hardened criminals is hardly the right answer. And the hardened criminal himself, given the proper encouragement, can become a useful worker inside prison walls and help lower the bill which society pays for his upkeep. A few can make the grade on the outside.

California has had its share of prison revolts, reforms, tyranny and other situations. Yet is is a fairly safe bet that the present regime is the best so far, and is paying dividends in many ways.

LARGE CHROME DEPOSIT PRODUCES 30,000 TONS A MONTH

The United States Chrome mines reports an output of 30,000 tons of ore a month from the Pelican chrome properties in this county.

The concentrates are reported to be averaging more than 50 per cent chrome. They are shipped to the Rustless Steel and Iron plant in Baltimore, Md.

Credited with containing one of the largest deposits of commercial chrome in California, the Pelican was recently acquired by the United States Chrome Mines.

Development of new ground is proceeding, the property has been provided with reduction facilities and working costs are low.

Rustless Mining company is operating extensive chrome deposits in the Nigger Hill area and building a mill with a daily capacity of 200 tons at its Gray Eagle chrome property near Orlando.

Both mines are said to contain extensive deposits of the vital strategic material. Rustless Mining is a subsidiary of Rustless Steel & Iron Company.

Several chrome properties are under operation in the Redding area. The Pacific Chrome & Maganese syndicate is buying chrome ore from a number of Shasta county producers.

The price of chrome was recently advanced $5 per ton and the mine ore is now quoted around $45 a ton in New York.

FIGHTING BITTER ON TWO EASTERN FRONTS

Rosenberg, outstanding ideological leader of the Nazi Reich, had been named reich-minister for the occupied eastern territories—a vast region stretching from the Baltic States to the occupied Ukraine.

The Germans were understood to plan to administer and exploit this area, which is rich in natural and industrial resources, as one unit supplementing the German economic set-up. The Russians have reported that their "scorched earth" policy has destroyed not only crops but most of the industrial machinery that was not removed to eastern cities, but German reports have indicated that this program was successful only to a limited extent.

In the far east, Papanese Premier Gen. Hideki Tojo and Foreign Minister Shigenori Togo outlined to the Diet the three-point program on which Japan hopes to reach a peaceful diplomatic settlement with the United States, Britain and the Netherlands, but emphasized that Japan is ready for any emergency if this program fails.

CALIFORNIA FARM PARADE
 By United Press

Secretary of Agriculture Wickard made a significant statement during his talk at the national Grange meeting.

Here's what he said: "So long as there are hungry people and people needing the necessities of life in this country of ours, there is no such thing as too much industry and agriculture."

Wickard was talking about post-war problems. It means that the make-shift program of forced scarcity that was used in the emergency of the 1930's is gone forever. That program of scarcity is gone right now, of course, because there is a great demand for farm products both at home and abroad. But Wickard was speaking of a post-war program that would eliminate hunger and see to it that everyone had all the necessities of life.

A lot of people have argued that

ARMY BOMBER CRASHES IN SNOWSTORM; FIVE OF CREW SAFE

PARK CITY, UTAH — (UP)—A B-18 army bomber crashed into 9,000 foot Iron Mountain, three miles west of this Wasatch range mining camp, in a snowstorm today.

Five of its crew of seven definitely escaped in parachutes. One man was missing. The seventh was known to have burned to death—but there was confusion as to his identity.

First official reports identified the body found in the scattered wreckage as that of Major E. L. Pirtle, commander of the 88th reconnaissance squadron at Fort Douglas.

But when the badly burned body was brought to park City and viewed by other officers, it was identified by some as that of Sgt. J. D. Anderson, previously thought only missing. Other officers still insisted it was Pirtle's.
